Jonathan Drubner Autobiography

When it comes to “profession,” funnyman Jonathan Drubner doesn’t know what to call himself.

So he just calls himself “Drubner.”

Drubner’s the host of ESPN Road Trip. He’s the head writer and co-producer of The ESPY Awards. He’s the writer, producer, and host of all things Video Gaming on Lifeskool (VOD). He recently wrote voice-over for Morgan Spurlock’s latest documentary, Where In The World Is Osama Bin Laden? He’s providing marketing & copywriting services for Microsoft, Reebok, Heineken, Sony, GMC, Ubisoft, ESPN Mobile, Capcom, and Atari. He’s back from Austin, where Vince Young’s Homecoming, the short film he wrote for the IFC series, Framed, was directed by Regina King. He’s performing Stand-up Comedy all over New York and Los Angeles. He’s writing and voicing interstitials for VH1 and the machinima series, Ill Messengers, for superdeluxe.com. And he’s really into the word “he’s.”

Formerly, Drubner was the director of programming at g-NET Media, where he served as the executive producer and field correspondent for Spike TV’s Fresh Baked Video Games, the writer, producer, and host of the MTV2 Game guide, and the writer, producer, and voice of AOL Games.

Additionally, Drubner is writing for Justin Timberlake, Jim Carrey, Kevin James, Jay Mohr, Shaun White, Ben Lyons, Will Ferrell, and John C. Reilly, developing a number of unscripted television shows, and humbly accepting all of the praise he received while touring the short film festival circuit with his award-winning musical comedy, Antiterror Man.
